A SCHOLARLY SUNDAY SERMON BY DR. N. M. WATERS.

Subject: Classic of a Profession.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 6.—The Rev. Dr. Nathan M. Waters, president of the Girls' Friendly Society, delivered the first of a series of Sunday afternoon sermons to young men. His text was from Proverbs xxii., 29, and the subject which a man should choose his life work. He said, among other things:

In a current book of travel I came upon an incident which struck me as a traveler in Japan says that one morning he passed on the quay in Yokohama a group of coolies carrying the body of a dead man. As the procession passed, the traveler asked the question, "Who is that?" and was answered by the next man in the line, "He is a Christian." Then the traveler asked, "What is a Christian?" and was answered, "He is a man who has no fear of death." Then the traveler asked, "Why has he no fear of death?" and was answered, "Because he knows that he is going to a better place." Every man who puts faith in Christ has the right to say that he is going to a better place. Every man who puts faith in Christ has the right to say that he is going to a better place. Every man who puts faith in Christ has the right to say that he is going to a better place.
